

Inter-Excel is a leading airline cabin and placement centre and most course attendees are guaranteed an interview spot when airlines recruit flight attendants.

Fancy being a flight attendant?

THOSE aspiring to be flight attendants should check out the flight attendant preparatory course offered by Inter-Excel, a leading airline cabin and placement centre.

The nine-week course teaches students presentation and communication skills, grooming and knowledge of the aviation industry.

Its aim is to prepare students for interviews and improve their language proficiency.

A career as a cabin crew is attracting more people, even graduates from non-related disciplines.

Gone were the days when people had a narrow perception of the profession. Now, many realise it can be one of the most rewarding careers, at least in widening their horizons as they travel all over the world.

One advantage of the course is that the instructors are experienced airline selectors who conduct interviews and screenings of cabin crew for various airlines.

Course students are guaranteed an interview with airlines.
